50 entries had been listed. He reported that publishers had shown a keen interest in the prize. He thanked all the judges for their hard work in helping to arrive at the winners. Whilst not unanimous the judges had concurred on the decisions.

The results for the Templer Medal were:

Winner: Rory Muir for Wellington (YUP)

Dr Philip Kerry reported on the 2016 Essay Prizes:

There had been one entry in the schools' section. It was not judged to have been of sufficient standard to receive an award. Four entries were received for the undergraduate section. Two stood out. By a divided vote Eamonn O'Keeffe of Merton College, University of Oxford was declared the runner-up. The winner was Matthew Mallia of the University of Malta. Both entrants would be attending the ceremony this evening. It was significant that the winner had been able to travel from Malta for the event.

Dr Kerry was to liaise with the Hon. Ed. about the publication of essays in the Journal.

Thanks were expressed to all those who had taken part in the judging. Thanks were also expressed to Dr Kerry for his oversight of the completion during the previous eight years.

P. McCarty was to take over responsibility for the 2017 competition. He would brief Council on what changes might be made to increase the number of entries.

Dr Peaty was unanimously requested to continue and agreed to do so for another year.

10. University Research Grants.

Ms Ismini Pells reported on the grants made during the previous year. She noted that there had been an increased number of application in 2016, with a corresponding increase in quality. The major grant, in particular, was extremely closely contested, going down to a casting vote in Council.

The minor grants were awarded to:

- 1) Mason Watson (Ohio State University) for his research on changing perceptions of the BEF during the inter-war years.
- 2) Adam Prime (University of Leicester) for his research into British officers in the Army of India 1861-1921.

The major grant was awarded to:

Nicola Watson (University of Stirling), who thesis studies ‘cultural paradigms of British imperialism in the militarisation of Scotland and North America 1745-76’.

Bryce Abraham (Newcastle University, NSW) received a special commendation from the Council for his project on Australian recipients of the Victoria Cross and was given honorary student membership of the SAHR.

Considering the increase in quality of the applications for the URGs and the SAHR's healthy financial situation, the Council voted in February to increase the prize money on offer to £500 (from £250) for the two minor grants and £1,000 (from £750) for the major grants. It is hoped that this will attract the very best researchers to the SAHR competitions, who are potential members and secure high-quality articles for the journal from the prize winners, as well as putting the SAHR grants on a par with those offered by other leading organisations

11. Future Events being organised by the Society.

Major General (retired) Ashley Truluck outlined the intentions of Council to organise a programme for the forthcoming year. Dr Peter Johnston would act as co-ordinator with Adam Storrington organising events for undergraduates.

13. The Centenary of the Society in 2021.

The Honorary Secretary informed the members that Council had already begun to consider how the centenary of their Society should be marked in 2021. Council had agreed to put aside a sum each year towards the costs of marking the centenary. He asked whether any member would be willing to help co-ordinate the arrangements for that year.

14. Any Other Business.

No business had been raised before the meeting. The Chair allowed questions from the floor.

A question was asked about how to contact the officers of the Society. In reply the Secretary indicated that it was hoped to renew the website through which it would become easier for members to contact the relevant officer. It was hoped that this would allow, and encourage, members to comment on the programme being offered.

Andrew Cormack drew attention to the new recruitment leaflet and encouraged members to make it available as widely as possible.

Michael Meech asked how the Templer Medal had become so popular. Dr John Peaty replied that it was due to a combination of factors. These included, the current popularity of military history, not least because of the anniversaries that fell in 2015, and that the sub-committee had been pro-active in contacting publishers. The award that recognised new scholarship was also welcomed by publishers.

15. Date of Next Meeting.

The 2017 Annual General Meeting will take place on Wednesday 26th April at a venue to be decided by Council.

There being no further business the meeting closed at 17.53 hrs.
